

Tim Samoff

My desire is to create art for art's sake.
By design I make art that's meaningful.

Design with roots.

“SINCE 1988”

I began my career in graphic design sometime during 1988. I designed logos and album covers for friends' bands. I didn't make a lot of money back then, but once in a while someone would pay me for my work. Sadly, most of those designs are long lost (and probably forgotten). But, what I do possess is a wealth of amazing experiences, having begun my education as a designer back when it was still done by hand, unaided by computers and fancy programs.

And, of course, I still love music.

Selected artwork from three of my own recordings

I've grown a lot during the years, beginning with pencil & paper, then learning Pagemaker and early versions of Photoshop. Later I moved on to Illustrator and QuarkXpress. Now, I'm quite at home with all of the apps in the Adobe CS4 suite.

LOGOS, PRINT COLLATERAL, ETC.

I have been helping individuals and companies come to terms with who they are for quite some time. From simple logo designs to business cards & stationary to complete public image overhauls, including corporate terminology, company culture, and media usage policies, I can lead the way — sometimes even adding some light-hearted humour to the mix!

Marathon Sod Rebrand

Southland Sod Farms (located in California) had been operating with a nearly 15-year-old identity by the time I began contracting with them. The brand revamp updated their Marathon Sod logo, advertising presence, and packaging.

Installation

Corporate art that doesn't suck.

THE IDEA OF AMBIENT LEARNING

In 2006, I was fortunate enough to be offered the task of designing a “make-over” for the breezeway in a building I was working in. After many iterations in design, materials, and budget, we were finally able to create something that was not only visually appealing, but functional as well.

“Tim Samoff, Multimedia Developer with Embarq (a spin-off of Sprint), recently designed a major art installation for the current corporate headquarters in Overland Park, Kansas to communicate a message. The art, unlike signs, does not point anyone to a specific direction or relay information that causes a visitor to buy or to act on something. But, the art, like signs, does communicate a message to those working within the Embarq headquarters.

Games

It's all fun and...

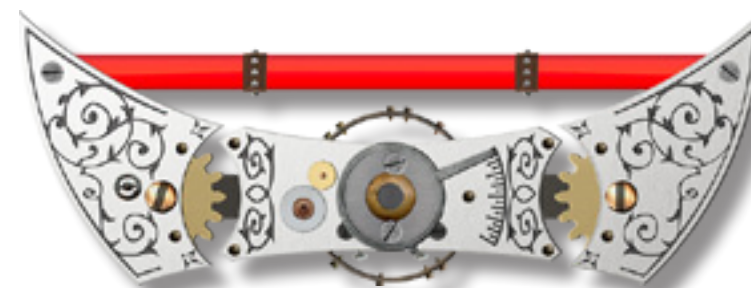

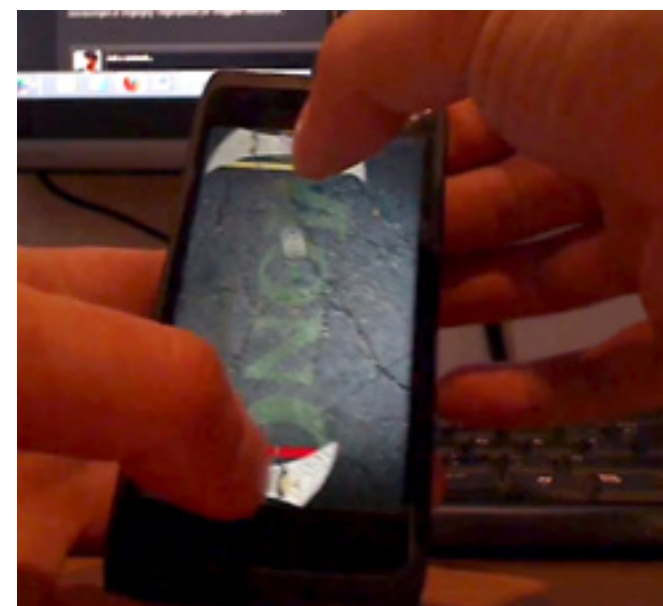

PLAYING FOR MONEY

From 1992 to 1999 I was a Senior Producer at a computer game company. While there, I produced over forty titles. Since then, my life as a game developer hasn't stopped. I've designed serious games in a corporate environment, marketing games on a contract basis, open source games just for fun... Now I teach game design at the college level.

Open Source Games

Here are two recent games that I've been working on with a global team of developers for the MeeGo platform. Plonk is a Steampunk-inspired multitouch Pong clone. GaberIn is a soccer ball juggling minigame.

UNANALOGOUS OF UNANALOG

Yes, I began my journey through the world of design in 1988, but it wasn't long after that I began commuting to and from the alternate universe of interactive. As a game developer, my life was about interactive. But, several roles that I held targeted the concept of allowing the end-user to interact with the design. Of course, the web was also right around the corner...

The Babylon 5 Limited Edition Entertainment Utility

I designed this user-interface to mimic the style of interfaces seen on computer screens on the television show Babylon 5. Back when I produced this software title, we were still dealing with 4-bit color, and creating good looking art was quite a challenge.

FORTUNE OR FORTUNATE

In 2008, I was lucky enough to have my own website featured in a book called, “The Web Designer’s Idea Book,” by Patrick McNeil, of Design Melt Down fame. Of course, my website is just one of many countless sites I’ve designed since 1993.
